

Subject: CURTAIL MEDICAL TESTING ON LIVE ANIMALS

Date: Tuesday, June 5, 2007 1:09 PM

From: Elin Defrin

Gentlemen and ladies:

It has been proven again and again that medical tests on live animals are basically worthless.

While animals and humans may share many similar DNA traits, they also differ so profoundly from each other to invalidate any conclusion a test may achieve.

It would be far easier and far more humane to test these techniques and medications with other means.

Squirting a toxic liquid into the eyes of a helpless animal or filling their veins with untested potions is not science. It is torture.

Please try to curtail these tests.

It probably would accomplish the same objective without the same process.

Thank you,

Elin Defrin